Hormones Fed to Animals Do Not Affect Food Fed Humans

QUESTION—It appears that the sexual roles are doomed to complete reversal if we women don't change our ways. Is it possible that men are losing interest in the masculine jobs around the house because of the female hormones they get whenever they eat foods coming from animals that have been given such products to speed growth? T.L.

ANSWER—Extensive studies have shown that none of the various hormone preparations used to stimulate animal growth reaches the consumer when food has undergone final processing and cooking. The Federal Food and Drug Administration keeps careful control over the use of hormones by farmers and feeders.

Women are assuming a more important role in the family, but this appears to be due principally to economic factors. Often it is necessary for both wife and husband to work if their living standard is to be maintained.

WITH A separate income, the wife may feel she is more important and be less willing to do all the household chores herself. In the sharing arrangement that may result, the husband may be found doing jobs that 50 years ago were considered the full responsibility of women.

Q.—I am at that period in my life when I am seeing many of my friends pass away. It makes me wonder how much longer I can expect to be alive and well, as well as my friends and relatives. I am 71. Mrs. F.J.

A.—Mrs. F.J., the average life expectancy in this country has increased by more than 22 years during the present century, the Health Information Foundation reports. The average baby born in 1900 could expect to live only 47.3 years, against 69.7 years for one born in 1959.

THE FOUNDATION reports that in 1959 life expectancy rose from 69.7 years at birth to 70.5 at age of 1. At age 5 it was down again to 66.8 years, at age 25 it was 47.7 years, at age 45 it was 29.3 years, and at age 65 it was 14.1 years. Persons surviving to 85 years had an average life expectancy of 4.6 years. It must be remembered, of course, that these are averages, Mrs. F.J., and that there are quite a few centenarians around. If you are in good health, you can probably expect to exceed any figure for your age. Careful periodic examination by your physician is recommended, as for a person of any age.
